

A film review :Hitchcock, Psycho

The film Psycho is a classic film, in the thriller genre. Directed by Alfred Hitchcock in 1960, it includes several main characters. In summary, Marion Crane receives $40,000 during her work. She is supposed to deposit them in the bank, but she decides to keep them and runs away. Marion finally arrived at a motel, where she met Norman Bates. She will then have dinner with him. This one finished, she's going to take a shower but Norman comes in and kills her. Marion's sister, Lila, and her lover Sam will hear the news of her death and ask Arbogast, a detective, to help them. While visiting Norman, Arbogast was killed by him. Sam and Lila decided to investigate the incident on their own. They learn that Norman's mother died a long time ago. Norman is finally arrested and we learn that he had a mental problem. He was schizophrenic.

I didn't like this movie because the story develops slowly. Furthermore, there is a lot of main characters and it was hard to follow. However, I liked the gloomy atmosphere and the music was well used. The clothes participated well in the immersion.
